An American Princess.

It has been stated in the GAZETTE that Genera! Von Waldersee has been appointed by Emperor William of Germany, to succeed General Von Moltke, who has been placed on the retired list. Count Waldersee has seen a great deal of service. He is a member of one of the ancient families of Prussia, handsome, and owes a great part of He offers special inducements at wholesale to dealers, and packs carefully for country custom.

my12 his success to his wife, who is an American woman. The daughter of David Lea, a banker of New York, in 1864 married morganatically Prince Frederick, of Schleswig-Holstein. During their bridal tour he willed her his estates, worth $4,000,000, and died shortly afterward of apoplexy. In the meantime she had been created a Princess of the Austrian Empire, and when she be came a widow was one of the wealthiest women in Europe. Madame de Noer, un-der which name the Princess was known, met at a German watering place Count Waldersee, who was a great favorite at the Court of Prussia and especially with Count Bismarck. The former was regarded as one of the most prominent staff officers in the Ger-

By the time that Princess de Noer's first year of widowhood had expired the battle at Sadowa had been fought, and the Count had been promoted from the rank of Colonel to that of Major General. As his wife the young American was far more likely to be able to enjoy to the fullest extent the advantages of her rank as Frincess than as a single woman and a foreigner. Accordingly, toward the end of 1866 a marriage took place between the Count and the widow, who shortly afterward proceeded with her husband to take up her residence in Berlin.

Aided by his charming wife's cleverness and wealth Count Waldersee became an important personage in the Prussian capi-A favorite of Field Marshal Von Moltke, and maintaining his intimate relations with the great Chaucellor, he gradually got to be looked upon in the light of the latter's representative on the headquarters staff He greatly distinguished himself during the Franco German war, and when, a couple years later, increasing age and infirmities forced Von Moltke to ask for a deputy, General Count Waldersee was nominated to the post with the rank of Quartermaster General of the Imperial German Empire. His wife's salon had meanwhile become a power in Berlin. It was the rallying place of the Chancellor's party as opposed to that of the anti-Bismarckian court factions, and the great statesman, who has molded in wonderful a manner the German Empire and German unity, is nevertired of expressing his warm regard for and high apprecia tion of the services rendered to his policy by the American Princess.

When, in 1881, Prince William, the present Emperor, married Princess Victoria, of Schleswig-Holstein, the power and influence of the Waldersees still further increased, for by virtue of her first marriage Princess de Noer is a grand-aunt of the royal bride. The latter, who is neither attractive nor clever, did not meet with much kindness at the hands either of the Prussian Royal family or of the Imperial court. Her mother-in law, the Empress Dowager Victoria, who is one of the most talented and clever women in Europe, is intensely intolerant of stupid women; and, unfortunately, she made no pretense of hiding the fact that she placed her eldest son's wife in that category. Thoroughly unbappy, disconcerted and friendless, Princess Victoria was only too glad to seize the helping hand held out to her by Count Waldersee's wife, and to avail herself of the relationship which existed between them to turn to her for guidance and advice. Few persons were better qualified than Countess Waldersee to act the part of mentor to the young Princess among all the pitfalls of the Berlin court and society. Nor was the result long in making itself felt. The present Empress became com-pletely subject to the will and direction of her clever relative, and the Emperor was not long in following his wife's example, and is now almost as subservient as the latter to the talented American. As soon as Emperor Frederick ascended the throne the Waldersees were thrown into the background, and on March 20 last the Count was removed from his position as Quartermaster General in the general staff and ordered to the command of the Army Corps of the Rhine. It was understood at the time that Prince Bismarck acquiecced in the transfer because of his annoyance over the anti-Semitic affair of last December. It was generally believed, however, that Count Von Waldersee would be recalled to the capital as soon as the Emperor Frederick had passed away and his son had come into power.

The Empress Victoria has always display ed a marked antipathy toward Count Waldersee's wife, whom she regards as a parve-nu, an intriguante and even as an adventuress. The bitterest enmity rages between the two women, and partly to this must be attributed the exceedingly strained relations between the Empress Victoria and her eld-est son and his wife. It was due to the in-fluence of Countess Waldersee that for several months before the Emperor Frederick's death the present Empress entirely ceased to correspond with her mother-in-law, and it is likewise due to the Countess that both the present Emperor and his wife have displayed such marked favor to the well-known Court Chaplain Stoecker, the leader of the "Judenhetz" movement, who is probably the bitterest and most openly avowed of the enemies of the Emperor Frederick and the Empress Victoria.
